

An Idolatrous Queen.

New York, Feb. 9.—Serena E. Bishop, editor of The Friend at Honolulu, writes to the Evening Post a long letter, dated January 18, giving details of the recent revolution, which, she says, had its origin in the "uprising of the heathen superstitions of this miserable woman, Queen Liliuokalani, who had been set on by native Kihunias." The letter says: There is indubitable evidence of her frequent participation in idolatrous worship, notwithstanding her frequency at church. Twice she has personally sacrificed to Pele. There is a large body of Hawaiians of elevated character and progressive civilization, but the mass of the natives have been bedeviled by palace Kahunism and debauched by palace immorality the past thirty years. The palace during that period has been a breeding nest of most poisonous influence, debauching and destroying the people with sorcery, lust and drunkenness, three chief causes of the wasting away of the Hawaiians.

The conclusion of the letter says: "The Americans have no option but to rise up for the preservation of their treasures," and expresses the belief that the "majority of the Hawaiians of character and substance have longed for the abolition of the monarchy. They look with like eagerness with us for the starry flag of protection and honor to float over these lowly islands."

Editor Pike of the Wadsworth Dispatch rises to put in his oar as follows:

Fashion papers say that crinoline or hooped skirts are coming in vogue again. Let 'em vogue. If a woman feels safer inside of a wire fence corral, or if she wants to make a center pole for a circus of herself, it is her own business, and no trousered critic has the right to say her nay.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Much the largest house of the season gathered at the Academy last night to witness Sutton's Uncle Tom's Cabin. The audience throughout enjoyed the entertainment. The little child that filled in between acts with songs and dances was probably the most finished performer in the company. The ease with which she performs difficult movements and the excellent time observed is little short of marvelous in one so young. The dogs are excellent specimens and performed their parts well. They were deserving of an encore.—Sioux City Journal.
